Abstract

The occupation of Iraq and the collapse of its nation resulted in many changes on the levels of state of Iraq and its political construction which are represented in the regime , the form of establishing the following national state in addition to the effectiveness and the position of private organizations and political parties in the political life.

Given these changes; the researcher faces many essential questions, among which are the following: What are the general characteristics of the Iraqi state after the collapse? What is the nature of the private organizations and the political trends that rise the Iraqi state? Did those changes affect the concept of citizenship in Iraq?

In a concentrated vision we try to follow up the provoked problems by general subjects can be enriched and developed depending on crystallizing the main features needed for developing the Iraqi social– political state.
